Dear John,

I would be remiss if I did not officially thank you, too, for spearheading the CI Commission effort and bringing it to such productive results. With the naming of the new NIO, we will take a much needed, significant step forward in improving our analysis of foreign intelligence activities.

We are also indebted to you for helping pave the way for general acceptance of this concept around town.

Sincerely,

William J. Casey

Dear [Redacted]

I am writing to express my thanks and appreciation, personally and on behalf of the United States Intelligence Community as a whole, for the service which you rendered as a member of the Advisory Commission on Multidisciplinary Counterintelligence Analysis.

The problems which your Commission examined were both complex and controversial. They involved organizational relationships of considerable intricacy and sensitivity.

I am fully aware of the personal commitment of time which your protracted and thorough investigation of these problems involved. Your recommendations have led to organizational decisions which I believe constitute substantial improvement in the structure of the intelligence community. These organizational improvements should have a significant and favorable effect on the security of the United States.

The successful consummation of your Commission's mission reflects most favorably the personal qualities, experience and objective judgment which you contributed to the Commission's work.

Sincerely,

William J. Casey

Dear Mr. Jefferson:

I would like to thank you, personally and on behalf of the United States Intelligence Community as a whole, for making Bill Cregar of your Legal Department available to serve on our Advisory Commission on Multi-disciplinary Counterintelligence Analysis.

Mr. Cregar's former service with the FBI enabled him to make a unique and significant contribution to this important effort. As a result of the Commission's work, several organizational improvements will be made that I believe will have a significant and favorable effect on the security of our country.

Knowing that Mr. Cregar must be a valuable contributor to Dupont, I thank you again for letting us share some of his time for this important task.

Sincerely,

William J. Casey
